HISTORY OF THE

Spartan Statue

Leonard D. Jungwirth, Michigan State College assistant professor in the Department of Art and Art History, created The Spartan in 1945. The statue is constructed of three large, glazed terra cotta clay sections that were fused together on site and filled with a poured concrete core. After World War II, metal was unavailable, so terra cotta was used.

The Spartan is believed to be the tallest, free-standing terra cotta sculpture in the world at 9 feet 7 inches. The original sculpture has a weight of 6,600 pounds.

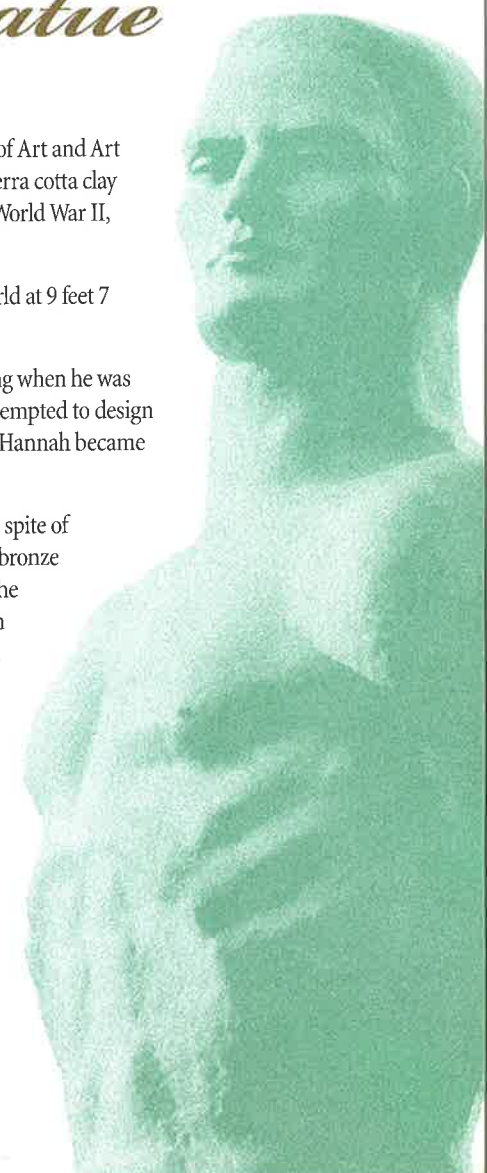

The idea of a statue was conceived in 1932 by then MSC Athletic Director Ralph Young when he was visiting the University of Southern California and saw their Trojan statue. Students attempted to design a Spartan statue, but the project failed. Nothing more was done until 1941 when John Hannah became president of MSC, and he asked Jungwirth to undertake the design of the sculpture.

After 60 years of exposure to Michigan's weather, the original sculpture was failing in spite of annual upkeep. Molds were made directly from the original sculpture to cast the new bronze statue. On May 11, 2005, the original sculpture was moved to the new atrium area of the Football Stadium addition. The new bronze sculpture was cast at Artworks Foundry in Berkeley, CA and weighs approximately 1,500 pounds. It was installed on August 10th, 2005, at 8:34 a.m.

On June 9, 1945, President John A. Hannah dedicated the original sculpture. (The program appears at the end of this booklet.) Students Leo "Mac" Cropsey and Susan C. Averill were selected to assist with the unveiling.

Thanks to the gifts of many, over $575,000 was raised for the casting of the sculpture, the creation and landscaping of the plaza area and for an endowment ensuring the care of both sculptures in perpetuity.
