THE MAY FESTIVAL.

The fifth annual May Festival on Thursday of last week proved unusually attractive. There were large audiences at both the afternoon and evening concerts, and their satisfied air of approval, as well as their hearty applause, argued them well pleased. It is gratifying to have evidence of the growth of a sound musical taste in the college community, through the increased popularity of the spring term concerts each year.

The artists's recital in the afternoon satisfied all who heard it that the choice of soloists for the oratorio was most wise. Indeed, it is seldom that four singers present a program in which all members are so uniformly pleasing. Little attention need be paid to gaining the effect of variety when the four qualities of voice are represented, yet the mingling of quartet, trio and duet with solo in selections, both dramatic and lyric, gave the concert interest at every moment of its progress and artistic excellence.

The first number, a quartet from Liza Lehman's arrangement of the "Rubaigat" by Omar Rhaggam, is always delightful, and served to make the audience eager to hear each of the four splendid voices in solo. Miss Pearl Benedict's sympathetic singing of a group of songs was enthusiastically received, and she responded to the encore with "You Cried in Your Sleep, My Baby," which confirmed the impression of her wonderful power in the expression of deep feeling. Her voice, contralto, is flexible and perfectly trained. Miss Benedict is soloist in one of the largest churches in New York.

The brilliant and artistic finish of Miss Caroline Hudson's work gained for her unstinted praise. One seldom hears a voice under such perfect control as hers. Her recent study with Mr. Henschel enabled her to give her "Spring Song" with inimitable skill, the high bird notes being remarkably clear and sweet.

Mr. Edward Strong, the tenor, showed a rare delicacy of artistic expression in all his work, especially in the singing of "Our Life is Vain," by Clayton Johns. The fact that Mr. Strong has only recently recovered from a severe illness, probably prevented him from doing himself full justice in dramatic interpretation; nevertheless, his pure, high voice and unerring taste in revealing the thought of the composer gained him many admirers.

Like Miss Hudson, Mr. Frederic Martin began his song group with one of the splendid arrangements by Schubert, which served excellently to bring out the range and perfect control of his voice. His is all a deep bass voice should be and he uses it with unvarying skill. Godard's "Embarquez-Vous" and MacDowell's "The Sea" both gave excellent opportunity for the beauties of Mr. Martin's voice to become apparent, and were well interpreted.

Mr. Strong and Mr. Martin both sing in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church in New York. The unison was therefore especially good in their duet and the trio from "Faust." The soloists and the audience were conscious throughout of the great contribution Mrs. Gutterson's accompaniments made to the pleasure of the afternoon's concert. She is justly much sought as an accompanist, because of her absolute accuracy in following the singer's every shade of thought and change of emotion, and in making the piano respond to every such variation.

The program follows. All the soloists responded to encores.

In the evening the oration "St. Paul," by Mendelssohn was given by the college chorus of 100 voices under the direction of Miss Louise Freyhofer. They were assisted by the soloists mentioned above and Mr. A. J. Patten. Mr. S. T. Schroetter of Bristol, Va., acted as oratorio accompanist and added much by his sympathetic playing.

The soloists entered into the spirit of the oratorio and sang their parts admirably. The recitatives were exceptionally well given, and were effective because of the careful enunciation of the artists. The solo parts by Mr. Strong were much enjoyed, especially the Cavahira "Be thou faithful unto death." Miss Benedict's solo, "The Lord is mindful of his own," won unstinted applause. Miss Hudson was uniformly good, and her recitatives were especially fine.

The bass, Mr. Martin, sang with feeling and power and mention may be made of his aria, "O God Have Mercy."

To the chorus belongs much praise indeed, and their hard work should be appreciated. The spirit in which they sang showed their thorough understanding of the oratorio. The chorus was well balanced except that the number of tenors was small. They are to be commended, however, for the correctness and fervor with which they sang. Certain parts sung by the chorus which stood out particularly were the chorals, "To Thee, O Lord, I Yield My Spirit," and "Sleepers, Wake," and the chorus, "How Lovely are the Messengers."

To Miss Freyhofer belongs great praise for the May Festival. She has worked untiringly and earnestly all the year. She is an enthusiastic leader and has the best interests of the college people at heart. For next year she is planning that the chorus study a lighter composition to be given at the May Festival of 1909, and that it spend part of the year working up on oration like "Elijah" to be given the succeeding year.

A mouse nibbled the signature from a will and deprived a San Francisco woman of a $5,000 legacy. No wonder some women fear mice!

GLENN WINCHESTER DODGE.

The short sickness of Mr. Glenn Winchester Dodge terminated in his death, about one o'clock Sunday morning. He was taken to the college hospital Wednesday afternoon, where it was found that an operation for appendicitis would be necessary. He was removed to the city hospital Friday and the operation performed the following day. Up to the time when he was taken to the college hospital he was seemingly in as good health as could be wished. Friday morning Mrs. W. C. Dodge and son arrived followed by Mr. Dodge, Saturday, and were with their son until death parted them.

GLENN W. DODGE

Glenn was born in Almont, Michigan, April 23, 1883, and was the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Dodge. He graduated from the Almont public schools in 1900, and taught school one year before entering M. A. C. in 1903 in the preparatory class. Glenn has been well and favorably known by nearly every student attending college during the last five years. In the fall term of his first year he became a member of the Eclectic society and has been a faithful member ever since. He was one of the most earnest student workers in securing the building of the society house, spending much of his time to that end. Last summer after the house was nearly finished he remained at the college to put the finishing touches on the work.

In his first year he won first place in the Eclectic freshman oratorical contest, and this year represented the society in the inter-society oratorical. Last fall term he was president of the society.

About the campus, on the athletic field, and in the recitation rooms Glenn was one of the most popular and well-liked men of the 1908 class. He was a member of his class baseball team for four years, and was manager two years. His happy disposition was marked by everyone who knew him. All during his sickness he was cheerful and had a pleasant smile for everyone attending him, and even to his last moments would not allow him to think of death. The news of his passing sadly affected all of his acquaintances, who had come dur-

HONORED BY FRANCE.

One of the highest agricultural honors which France can bestow has recently been awarded to Prof. Levi R. Taft by the department of agriculture of that country.

It is a certificate and official button of Officiere Du Meriti Agricole, an honorary title rarely conferred upon Americans. As a well known authority in his line of work, and on account of his activities at the St. Louis exposition as chairman of the committee on agricultural awards, Prof. Taft has secured for himself a name abroad, and for the college this distinctive honor.

It's a curious fact that the man who conducts his life on the "don't worry" principle either has a permanent job or is a professional loafer.

THE SUMMER SCHOOL.

The summer school in agriculture as announced some time ago will be given at the college from June 29 to July 24 inclusive. This course will be open to any one but it is especially designed for teachers who desire to fit themselves for teaching agriculture in the high schools and for teachers of county normal training classes. No credit will be given on the regular agricultural course for work done at the summer school.

The subjects offered are: Agricultural Pedagogy, by Prof. W. H. French; Soils and crops, by Mr. F. W. Howe; Horticulture by Prof. C. P. Halligan; Live Stock, by Mr. A. C. Anderson; Ornithology by Prof. W. B. Barrows; Entomology, by Prof. R. H. Pettit and Plant Life, by Dr. Beal.

Sunday morning the remains were brought to the Eclectic House where they were viewed by many of his friends. The funeral was held Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, at his home in Almont. Representatives of the Eclectic society, Messrs. Arthur Barley, his roommate, and Lodiwic McGillivray, and other members were present. Mr. Francis Kiefer represented the senior class. The floral offerings were profuse, many being sent from the societies of the college. The offering sent by his class was a large pillow consisting of the letters of his class, '08, in red carnations on a bed of white flowers of the same kind with a border of Easter lillies.

The departed member of the family leaves a father, mother, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Dodge, and brother and sister, Mitchell and Bee Dodge to mourn his loss.

FACULTY-SENIOR BALL GAME.

One of the best base ball games of the season will be pulled off Saturday afternoon between the faculty and seniors at the athletic field. Don't miss it. Curtain will rise at 3:00 p. m. The following list of "notables" will uphold the dignity of the faculty and will be supported by the younger members of the faculty: J. L. Snyder, 2d base; A. R. Sawyer, 3rd base; A. M. Brown, 1. f.; T. C. Blaisdell, c. f.; R. S. Shaw, pitcher; G. W. Bissell, 2 f.; L. R. Taft, catcher; H. K. Vedder, 1st base; Capt. Fuger, ss.; Thomas Gunson, umpire; Dr. Beal and Dean Gilchrist score keepers. The following will comprise the senior line up:

"Shorty" McVannel, pitcher; Mr. Zimmer, catcher; Walter Small, 1st base; T. W. Twaits, 2nd base; J. V. Gongwer, 3rd base; M. E. Hall, s. s.; Sam Horton, 1. f.; Walter Hopson, c. f.; Harry Hagaman, r. f.

Admission 15c. Grand stand free.

RESOLUTIONS.

THE SPIRIT OF WORK.

(A Paper Read at the Open Meeting of the Honorary Fraternity, Tau Beta Pi, May 21, 1908.)

In conserving the energy of application consistency should be a watchword. I am not an advocate of the theory of burning the midnight oil for any considerable period of time, for the brain may become so dulled from constant application that its train of thought may be neither logical nor effective. In this sense "Much study is a weariness to the flesh." Then there is the man who believes that every minute spent in application to books is a step toward the goal of mental power. The mind is a machine requiring careful tending to keep it at its highest efficiency. Few of us are endowed with the physical stamina which does not feel the strain of prolonged mental application. The really effective student or brain worker, then, is the one who regards both his energy and time factor, the one who can develop the great brain-power per hour.

But we do not mean to say that the student should spend part of his time in idleness for the sake of renewing mental energy. Our faculties are intended to be used and the way to use them to the best advantage is to occasionally divert the mind from one form of occupation to another. Even mathematics, exacting as it is, may be a relief from the wearisome study of humdrum English. It is desirable to cultivate the faculties to the enjoyment of a diversity of things which are good and proper. A good engineer or scientist trained to think vigorously and rigidly should be capable of enjoying a good play or a bit of light literature occasionally to relieve mental strain. But it should be remembered that these things are not the chief ends of life.

Then, again, you are all familiar with the brilliant man who fails. How often does the erring high school graduate lose out who begins his college career resting on the oars of his record in the high school or preparatory work. Rather the man who has never seen the inside of college halls, than the one who enters them with the belief that the prestige of brilliancy alone counts. The plodder is not to be sneered at. The slow thinker may be digesting and assimilating matter which only flashes through the mind of the superficial; and moreover, the value of these assimilated facts may not be apparent until called into use by the demand of actual need. Whatever other traits we endeavor to develop in character let honesty be the chiefest. Not only that virtue which prevents a man seeking aid from his fellows in an examination, but rather in that broad sense which prompts him to be true to himself in all things. How often have we heard students boast of the work they have escaped in this or that class, or how much time they have cheated from the instructor. It is unnecessary to add that this attitude defeats the very purpose these same persons avow in enrolling as students. In other words it is not honesty to self or teachers. Others delude themselves into thinking that the particular subject under consideration has no important bearing on the course of study. Here too it is manifestly in error for a student to assume to place a value on a subject when he has not yet studied the subject, nor the subjects following; nor in more than one case in a hundred perhaps does he know what bearing that subject may have on his work in after years.

After all a man may have a keen mind, be consistent and persistent in his work, honest to himself and others, and yet lack some of the elements of success. We want vision, that confidence in ourselves and others, our work and the future, to feel that we can fill a need and be of service to mankind. We should have breadth of mind to see into the future and live up to its possibilities. We should see ourselves in true relation to our surroundings and not a little as others see, remembering that in our lives as in engineering, "The supreme excellence is simplicity."

HARRY H. MUSSELMAN.

ACROSS THE ATLANTIC IN A CATTLE BOAT.

Senior and Soph and Fresh one day
Set out in a cattle ship,
Steamed to the ocean down the bay
Out of a Montreal slip.
"Where are you going and what is your game?"
Their comrades asked those three.

"Darned if we know; but all the same
Happy as larks are we;
And happier still we're going to be,"
Said Senior
And Soph
And Fresh.

Days and weeks and months they sped,
Painting that foreign clime
A beautiful, bright, vermillion red
And having a bird of a time.
'Twas all so gaudy a lark; it seemed
As if it could not be,
And some folks thought it a dream they dreamed
Of sailing a foreign sea,
But I'll identify you these three—
Two friends,
My pardner
And me.
—Eugene Field with variations.

A trip to Europe by cattle boat! What an idea! This was the unanimous opinion of four University of Michigan students after listening to the wonderful tales of an enthusiastic veteran who had just returned from a trip abroad. The longer they discussed it the larger the idea grew, with the result that, after finishing up their scholastic duties for the year, they were ready to out-London, the redoubtable "Jack" himself in search in the under world after material for sociological study. The route selected was that covered by the Donaldson line between Montreal and Glasgow; the date of sailing, the summer of 1907.

The student who takes the cattle-boat route pays a much cheaper rate than the more privileged cabin passengers, and accordingly is assigned quarters further down in the ship's belly. The fee charged by the cattle agent to insure passage is usually $3 per head, with the understanding that 5 shillings are to be refunded on the arrival of the ship in a foreign port. This fee is not necessary if the right agent is approached in the right way at the right time.

We rode the cattle train from Toronto to Montreal and on the afternoon before sailing we changed our clothes for ordinary "jumpers," and that evening went down to the wharf to sign the ship's papers. Happy to relate, we were not seriously disappointed in our prospective companions for the voyage. All in all, they were a hard looking lot, some of them were returning English immigrants who had tired of Canada and were anxious to get back home, while most of them were wharf rats and regular cow punchers. The term "cattleman" needs to be explained here as the lowest type of humanity on shipboard, the scorn of the officers and common seamen alike, consequently this ten days of fall in social rank was in reality rather oppressive.

The headquarters of the gang, a combination mess, baggage and sleeping room, was certainly not calculated to make one over enthusiastic. The bunks were laid out in two tiers, of ten sleeping boxes each, one tier being directly above the other. The so-called bunk was just wide enough for a lean man to squeeze into between the boards forming the sides, and was provided with a gunny sack mattress and two rather filthy blankets. For the safe keeping of our baggage an arrangement was made with several of the ship's steward's in exchange for the traditional tip.

SYRACUSE 4—M. A. C. 2.

In the best game of the year and one of the best games ever played on the local diamond Syracuse University won by a small margin of two points over the M. A. C. team last Friday, and but for a desperate rally by the locals in the ninth would have scored a shut-out.

The game was fast and many good plays were pulled off, but Stein had much the better of Vaughan in the pitching line, Ernie not showing up in usual form. Syracuse played an errorless game and unquestionably had the better of the locals, who, however, exhibited the best form they have shown this season. In the ninth inning Vondette was substituted for Nelson and made good with a two-bagger, which started M. A. C.'s good fortune which netted two runs before the inning closed.

to the ship's hold is an exciting scene. It is at this particular time that many would-be globe-trotters lose courage and decide to return to mother. One's first night on the ocean is sure to be accompanied by the firm conviction that the ship will sink before morning, and the unearthly chorus of bellowing bulls in the near-by stalls, punctuated by the boom of the fog whistle and rattle of the tiller's chains does not diminish the distress of mind of the traveler.

After being rushed into the ship's hold the cattle are tied in long rows of stalls, which are built on both sides of the ship and in the middle, leaving only room for an aisle on each side, through which the watering and feeding can be done. The beasts were mostly long-horned Canadian cattle, and for the first few days made punching cattle out in Colorado look like a sick man's job. The tying of the cattle was the most strenuous part of the work, the lasso and half-hitch around some convenient brace being resorted to at last.

The cargo consisted of 560 cattle and 20 horses, which were distributed on the main and lower decks. After the second day down the river the men were divided into three gangs, each one being overseen by a boss selected for his skill in the use of cuss words and at belaying the "bloody" cattle.

The daily routine of work among the cattlemen is an interesting one to read about. At 4 a. m. the unfortunate is aroused by the call "eight bells and all is well," then an order from the boss, "You bloody devils bound right out." All hustle down through the dark, chill air, bucket in hand, to water the famished cattle. After this is done, bails of thistly hay are pulled up by hand from the hold and fed to the cattle. This usually takes till 8 o'clock, when "morning luncheon" is served. After this the men are set to work to clean out the feed boxes with paddles preparatory to feeding the corn and meal. At 2:30 the animals are again watered and fed and the day's work is done.
