THE PLANKS.

Hear the banging of the planks—
Oaken planks —

What a world of misery lies along these planks!

How one stumbles, trips, and falls with a thud

In the mud.

In the icy air of night,
When the stars do over sprinkle
All the heavens, how they sparkle
With a devilish delight!

Then one slips, slides, and skates,
And calls on all the Fates,
Swears a little, and says he hates

These College planks.

Oh the planks, planks, planks,

The long, narrow, flopping, sliding, slipping, splashing, squeaking, splintering, twisting, tripping teetering, criss cross planks!

Can the State not give us something better than these planks?

Anon.

Yesterday Prof Holdsworth gave an exceedingly interesting and instructive lecture to his class in Drawing. He treated the subject historically, practically, and artistically. He showed many specimens of work from the wood in the rough, to the finished print.
